THE federal government has caved in to pressure and scrapped three troubled environmental programs in what has been labelled an admission of bungled administration.

The decision to scrap and drastically remodel the schemes for insulation, solar hot water and Green Loans was timed to head off a full-blown parliamentary assault by next week. But the action only increased calls for the Environment Minister, Peter Garrett, to resign.

“This is the biggest admission of policy and delivery failure in recent political history,” said the Opposition Leader, Tony Abbott.

“The scale of the failure and the impact on the community is massive. You cannot abolish a program of this scale for systemic failure without sacking the minister responsible for that failure.”

As insulators warned of job losses, Kevin Rudd ruled the issue done with. “Peter’s done the right thing in closing the insulation program and replacing it with a new program for the future,” the Prime Minister said.

The changes, approved by cabinet on Thursday, involve abolishing the economic stimulus programs that paid installers $1200 for each home they insulated, $1600 for each solar hot water system installed, and $1000 for a heat pump.
